In the meantime, the Council realised that there was a relational and interactional gap between young people and the older generation in the town. Therefore, they set up a mixed team of psychologists, community and social workers to develop joint activities for secondary school students expelled from school and older people in local day and older people's centres. Thanks to this initiative, younger people's tolerance and empathy towards older people has greatly improved and there has been an improvement in social cohesion within the local community."
